POWER OF PERSONALITY.....

Some people attract others to them like honey attracts bees; a magnet draws particles of steel. Everything seems to go their way, even though they apparently do not put much effort into what they do. They just seem to have that magical magnetism that attracts. On analysing these people, you'd probably find they have attractive qualities, and possess a personality charm that others cannot resist. A great deal of the charm of a magnetic personality is created by cultivating a fine manner. Being tactful and sensitive towards others is an important quality. Knowing intuitively just what to do, and when to do it. The magical essence of the power of attraction is impeccable judgement and lots of common sense. Refined tastes, pleasant to be near, and having uplifting words are all obvious attributes to cultivating your popularity. Encouraging the art of being agreeable, to be able to agree to disagree will certainly develop your self-expression in displaying empathy and compassion towards your fellow man. This in turn attracts your fellow man to you - a charming, gracious, agreeable personality is very soothing to be around. Honesty, sincerity, integrity, simplicity and decisiveness attracts like nothing else! It becomes rather obvious then, that the key to attaining a gracious, friendly manner which will in turn reward you with the friendship and respect of others, is to cultivate those likeable qualities in your personality. Practice them at every opportunity and watch them become habits that support you.

BE SELECTIVE.....

Albert Einstein said "If I seem to see more than other men, it is because I stand on the shoulders of others."

How would you interpret that? Was he inferring that the greater our ability to raise ourselves through others' experiences, the higher we climb? How many of you read systematically for the purpose of learning from others' experiences? The observation of Charles B. Newcomb is fairly significant: "If we are not responsible for the thoughts that pass our doors, we are at least responsible for those we admit and entertain." And so is this: "All the water in the seven seas cannot sink a ship unless it gets on the inside."

No amount of pessimism, cynicism or negativity can ever sink you unless you allow it to enter and lodge in your consciousness.

How much does smart talk, criticism, or a belittling attitude affect

Only as much as you take in and make your own. While it remains outside, it can have no affect. It makes sense then to leave it outside of you, in the knowledge that you and you alone, choose the thoughts, attitudes and reactions that you want to admit into your consciousness, as yours.

So choose wisely those thoughts, attitudes, reactions, beliefs and opinions you do allow to enter into your consciousness - choose positively - because these things will rule whatever you think, say and do. Just think about what your day could be like if you refused to take in and allow to become yours - any thing, thought, attitude, action, belief or opinion that does not serve you It would be a day to remember! A day in which you'd really love yourself and others. A day to rejoice
